STATUS UPDATE

FRIENDS TAKE SAME PHOTO EVERY 5 YEARS

CNN

When five teenagers sat down and posed for a picture at Copco Lake in 1982, they didn't plan on making it a tradition. But that's what it became.

Every five years for the past three decades, John Wardlaw, John Dickson, Mark Rumer, Dallas Burney and John Molony have been meeting at the California lake and taking the same photo.

The first photograph of the high school friends was just happenstance. Wardlaw, known as Wedge in the group, had a family cabin at the lake where the friends gathered in July 1982.

While hanging out on the deck of the cabin, Dickson, or J.D., set his 35-millimeter camera on self-timer to take a group photo.

"For some reason, we all chose to have dark and mysterious expressions on our faces," Wardlaw said. "I'm sure we all thought we were being really cool."

Though they tried a couple of poses, the one that would eventually win as the official vacation photo depicts the five teens, three of them shirtless, with shaggy hair typical of the time. They were about 19 years old.

Molony, known in the group as Belves, is pictured holding a Folgers Instant Coffee jar, which contained a cockroach the guys had decided to keep as a pet. They fed their new friend a piece of butterscotch candy and kept it company with a photo of Robert Young.

"Priorities were so different back then. All

I was really thinking about was summer and girls," Wardlaw said.

As the men went into their college years, they returned to the lake every summer.

They spent their time fishing and reading and playing roles in homemade movies shot by Wardlaw, who now is a filmmaker.

"We're all very creative people, so we would take all of our creative energy and focus it into a certain direction," Molony said. "It wasn't, 'Let's all get together and get drunk.' It was, 'Let's get together and see who can make the funniest joke or pull off the sneakiest prank.'"

It wasn't until five summers later when Wardlaw, a photography enthusiast, decided it would be fun to re-create the photograph they'd taken in '82.

In 1987, the now college-educated men sat in the same position on the same bench, again with a self-timed camera.

The jar, a different one this time, contained no cockroach, and the hat held by Wardlaw was different as well. The expressions however, were unchanged.

"I think I had a feeling this might become some cool tradition, but I had no idea we would still be doing it for 30 years," Wardlaw said.

Self-righteousness with that order?

Ryan Smith

redeye@tribune.com

The waffle fry dangled from my fingertips, suspended halfway between the table and my mouth.

I had to ask: "How do you feel about gay marriage?"

The golden and greasy crosshatched potato remained steadfast in its silence, leading me to conclude that this was a Libertarian french fry with neutral feelings about same-sex unions. It seemed safe for consumption.

OK, obviously this fantasy premise of quizzing my chicken strip combo meal is ridiculous, but not so much if this boycott of Chick-fil-A is taken to its logical extreme.

Here's a recap: Dan Cathy, president of the popular fast-food chain, recently created a Southern-fried firestorm of controversy after telling the Baptist Press that he supports "the biblical definition of the family unit."

Many in the progressive community have passionately advocated for a boycott of the restaurant, and Chicago Ald. "Proco" Joe Moreno (1st) says he will block construction of a new Chick-fil-A in Logan Square over Cathy's "bigoted beliefs." Christian conservatives, in turn, predictably returned fire—and former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee went so far as to declare a Chick-fil-A Appreciation Day. (It's on Wednesday, so make your party plans now.)

I disagree with Cathy's backward beliefs, but I also have a beef (sorry Chick-fil-A) with turning chicken into political fodder and boycotting a company that espouses views that differ from my own—especially because the application of this principle is inconsistent.

Let's face it: Chick-fil-A is an easy target for liberals. It's a chain restaurant born and bred in the Deep South that's closely identified with food courts and shopping malls. It's run by a brazenly outspoken bigot. It's the opposite of vegan-friendly. We're not exactly talking about Bleeding Heart Bakery here.

Meanwhile, progressives seem to have more trouble boycotting companies they tend to like better. Few people I know tossed out their iPhones or iPads after an investigation earlier this year revealed the Chinese factories that produce Apple products were guilty of all sorts of human rights violations.

I'm also not sure many consumers stopped seeking cheap furniture at Ikea or ordering shirts from L.L. Bean after they made the International Labor Rights Forum's Sweatshop Hall of Shame in 2010. And if you care about companies that donate to anti-gay organizations, why not tear up your ATM card from Chase or Bank of America? Both banking giants have made significant contributions to the campaign for Mitt Romney, the presumptive GOP presidential candidate who opposes gay marriage.

But forget intellectual consistency for a moment and ponder this: Do we really want to foster a commercial culture in which the politics of the executives behind the products matters just as much as the quality of the product? Imagine if we get to the point where a company's political leanings are stamped on the box next to the nutrition information.

"Look, honey, no trans fat ... and they believe in global warming!"

I'm just not ready for Pro Choice Pizza or Free Market Franks.

It's back! Twitter was busted for what felt like an eternity Thursday, so we're welcoming it back with a vengeance. Here are a few Chicagoans you should be following. Suggest someone you think we should feature by sending a tweet to @JessicaGallart.

@HELLOCULLEN

Why you should follow: We've featured the parody @PinterestFake account here before, and Cullen Crawford is the guy behind it, as well as a writer for "The Late Live Show." We took notice when he started a hilarious string of tweets with the #ThisAmericanLifeStories hashtag playfully mocking the popular Ira Glass radio program, which eventually got picked up by Patton Oswalt and others on Twitter. Tip of the hat to you, sir.

City's only Chick-fil-A restaurant invites mayor to meet owner, staff

Chicago Tribune

The owner of the city's only Chick-fil-A restaurant late Wednesday asked Mayor Emanuel to meet with her after Emanuel said the anti-gay marriage views of the fast-food chain's president don't mesh with Chicago values.

Lauren Silich, who owns a Chick-fil-A franchise just off the Magnificent Mile that opened last year, wrote in a news release that she is dedicated to "serving all of our guests with honor, dignity and respect. ... We alone created 97 jobs this past year and our passion is building leaders for future generations, regardless of sexual orientation or beliefs."

She invited Emanuel to meet her, her husband and management staff at the restaurant. The mayor's office had no immediate response.

In an interview Thursday, Silich addressed Emanuel's comments.

"I get it," Silich said. "I'm from here as well. ... I just want people to know there's a local face to this controversy. We're not a corporate face. We love our city."

Silich said she would never discriminate against anyone and has gay employees working at her restaurant.

Silich said she has deep Chicago roots and her husband, Steve, works for the city. City records indicate he's a police sergeant.

"We hold fundraisers for hospitals, schools, fallen police, and we donate to a wide variety of causes, including everything from churches to gay and lesbian organizations," Silich wrote.

The controversy over Chick-fil-A began earlier this week when the Tribune reported that Ald. Proco "Joe" Moreno (tst) planned to use his aldermanic privilege to block the construction of a second Chick-fil-A in Logan Square because of comments made last week by company President Dan Cathy.

Cathy was quoted July 16 in the Baptist Press saying he was "guilty as charged" for supporting "the biblical definition of the family unit. We are a family-owned business, a family-led business, and we are married to our first wives. We give God thanks for that."

Mayor Emanuel, a supporter of gay marriage, is in Moreno's corner. "Chick-fil-A values are not Chicago values," the mayor said in a statement when asked Tuesday about Moreno's decision. "They disrespect our fellow neighbors and residents. This would be a bad investment, since it would be empty."

Chick-fil-A headquarters officials have not responded to repeated requests for comment.

The Chick-fil-A in River North opened June 16, 2011, and is from different owners than the proposed Logan Square location.

Make way for Motorola Mobility

Chicago Tribune

Smartphone maker Motorola Mobility will move its headquarters from Libertyville to the Merchandise Mart next summer, relocating 3,000 employees to downtown Chicago, the company and Mayor Emanuel announced Thursday.

Motorola Mobility, which was acquired by Google for $12.5 billion in May, will invest $300 million in the move. The figure includes rent on a 15-year lease for nearly 600,000 square feet that includes the top four floors and rooftop of the design center.

No employees will be left in Libertyville, which long has been the headquarters for Motorola's cellular handset division. When Motorola Inc. spun off its mobile devices and cable TV boxes into an independent entity called Motorola Mobility at the beginning of 2011, the company kept its headquarters at the Libertyville campus.

The city did not provide any financial incentives for the move, though the company has received incentives to remain in Illinois. In 2011, after considering a headquarters move to California or Texas, Motorola Mobility struck an agreement with the state to maintain a local workforce of 2,500 in exchange for more than $100 million in tax credits over 10 years. That agreement remained in place after the Google acquisition.

The relocation benefits the city and the company, Emanuel and Motorola Mobility chief executive Dennis said Thursday. The city is eager to establish Chicago as a hub for technology companies that will create high-value jobs.

Missing canal swimmer found in his undies

A man who took a swim in the Chicago Sanitary and Ship Canal early Thursday sparked a search that ended when the man was found walking in his underwear on a canal embankment near southwest suburban Summit. Summit police said they received a call about 1:25 a.m. that the man, believed to be in his 50s, had been drinking with two female friends at the Port of Summit boat launch, 7800 Lawndale Ave., on the south side of the canal. Officials said the man decided he wanted to swim to the other side of the canal, stripped off his clothes and jumped in.

Attempted murder suspect arrested in Calif.

A 55-year-old man who fled Illinois and had been living under an assumed name after being charged with trying to kill a man in 1994 was arrested in California and is expected to return to Chicago, FBI officials said Thursday. Jose Hernandez Saldana, whose last local address was in the 11100 block of South State Street, was arrested after fingerprints tied him to a Sept. 15, 1994, attempted murder in Chicago, according to a criminal complaint filed in L.A.

Epic fail! Twitter makes another major crash

SAN FRANCISCO Twitter suffered its second widespread outage in five weeks Thursday, a blow to the micro-blogging service's reputation and reliability.

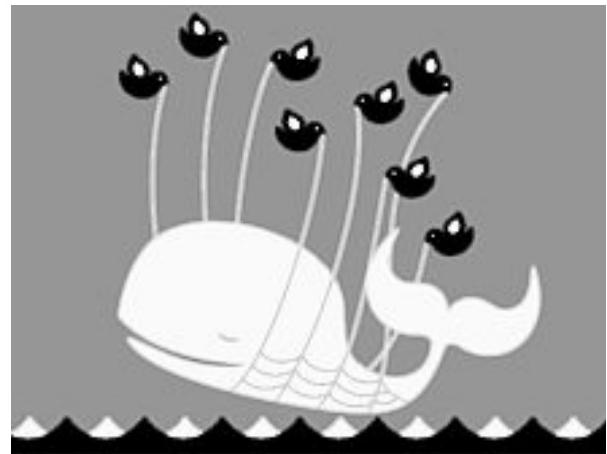

Twitter—infamous for its “fail whale” outage messages in its early years—went dark for hours June 21. On Thursday, users trying to log on to its website were greeted only by an incomplete error message: “Twitter is currently down for. We expect to be back in.”

“Users may be experiencing issues accessing Twitter. Our engineers are currently working to resolve the issue,” the San Francisco-based company wrote in a blog post shortly after 10:30 a.m. CDT.

The June episode revived fears that stability issues may once again be plaguing Twitter, which claims to have significantly improved its infrastructure. The company blamed that incident on a “cascading bug.”

Founded in 2006, Twitter’s phenomenal growth means it has struggled to handle the ever-rising volume of tweets. But in recent years, it has devoted considerable resources toward improving reliability in a move to project itself as a mature, polished brand.

Chief executive Dick Costolo, who has focused on improving the service’s profitability and attracting advertisers, said last month that Twitter has 140 million active monthly users who send 400 million tweets daily.

Google’s online messaging and voice-calls service—Google Talk—also went down for hours Thursday in what appeared to be a separate outage. The issue should have been resolved as of mid-morning, according to the company’s status update page.

'Mortgage' isn't a dirty word

YOUNG MONEY

Megan Crepeau

redeye@tribune.com

Is it just me, or is the American Dream terrifying? I mean, not the dream itself, but how expensive it is. Around here, those quaint little white-picket-fence houses cost close to a million dollars. I've never had a million pennies in my bank account, let alone a million dollars.

Believe it or not, though, this is actually not a bad time to buy a house. It is, in the long run, cheaper than renting. You get major brownie points with the credit bureaus, and home equity will make you feel richer than you are.

But the house's sticker price is only the beginning. Even if you woke up tomorrow morning with enough money for a down payment on Dream Condo, you'd have to pay closing costs, property taxes and condo fees. You'll have to pay an inspector and do all your own maintenance. You'll have interest on that mortgage. (What's that George Carlin line? "It's called the American Dream because you have to be asleep to believe it.")

But, none of that matters if you can't come up with the damn down payment. Here are three ways to help you reach goal. And hurry up—it won't be a buyer's market forever.

Fun fact: You don't actually have to come up with a 20 percent down payment unless you really, really want to. If you qualify for a Federal Housing Authority-insured loan, it could be as low as 3.5 percent of the sticker price—and they can roll closing costs and other fees into your mortgage.

As far as actually saving the money? Try starting a Roth IRA. It's technically a retirement account, but you can withdraw up to $10,000 penalty-free if you use the money for a down payment on a first home.

Find one with a low starting balance requirement and a nice high interest rate, set up automatic deposits from your checking account, and in a few years you'll be browsing Zillow.

Are you looking locally? Depending on how much money you make, you could qualify for assistance from Chicago's Neighborhood Housing Services. Their Home Buyer Education program includes individualized mortgage counseling, pre-approval for a mortgage, and programs that can knock your down payment to 3 percent.

Oh, and—really, this should just be at the end of every column—keep your credit score up. Without it, you might as well kiss Dream Condo goodbye.

MEGAN CREPEAU IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR. SHE'S A 20-SOMETHING COLLEGE GRAD NAVIGATING THIS DUMPY JOBMARKET JUST LIKE THE REST OF US.

Career fair? Rest up and be prepared

Chicago Tribune

Attending a job fair can be unnerving. You know you need to impress recruiters and you know you need to do it quickly. If you take a casual approach to that initial interview at a company's booth, you may be sealing your fate. After all, if you're not taking advantage of an opportunity to impress at a job fair, you can be sure that someone else will.

Job seekers should treat a job fair interview as if it's their one and only chance to sell themselves to the employer. Here are five tips to participating in a brief interview at a job fair:

1 Dress the part: Don't be the guy in cargo shorts and flip-flops. You're looking for a job—dress like it. Wear anything less than a shirt and tie for men or business-appropriate attire for women and you're underdressed.

2 Hand it over: Your initial handshake is important. Don't offer up a flimsy or sweaty hand. Instead, when you meet with prospective employers or interviewer, offer a firm handshake, with one or two pumps from the elbow to the hand.

3 Rehearsal space: Interviewing skills are learned and refined over time. Don't go into the job fair cold. Be sure to practice ahead of time with a friend or family member.

4 Get happy: Bring a positive attitude to the job fair, even if it's 90 degrees outside and you rode one train and two buses to get there. Most interviewers won't even give a second thought to someone who has a negative presence or seems like they almost need to be talked into the job.

5 Question authority: When participating in the job fair interview, it's helpful to have a handful of questions to ask the potential employer. Some questions could include: What do you consider to be the ideal background for the position? What are some of the significant challenges?

RIDE THE WIND

It's not Lake Michigan, but England will do for Chicago Olympian

By Scott Bolohan | FOR REDEYE

Chicago might be the Windy City, but no one would confuse it with the Windsurfing City.

But that didn't stop Chicago native Bob Willis from becoming the first windsurfer not from California or Florida to represent the U.S. in the Olympics. Not bad for what started as just a hobby on Lake Michigan.

Willis, 25, sailed at the Columbia Yacht Club starting at age 8 and picked up windsurfing in his spare time. That hobby evolved into a full-time job for Willis as he trains year-round. His dedication paid off after winning both Olympic qualifiers to become the youngest Olympic windsurfer since 1988.

While Willis has the look of a typical surfer with his dark tan, laid-back attitude and pretty awesome hair, he is serious about the sport, spending the past few months training in Weymouth, England, site of the sailing events in the London Games. RedEye caught up to Willis before he headed to the Olympics.

How did you get started with windsurfing in Chicago?

I was in the Columbia Yacht Club and I started racing sailboats and got involved in local sailing teams. But I got into windsurfing as an outlet to sailing with my brother and a friend. We just picked up windsurfing casually. We would just do it out of the Columbia Yacht Club or sometimes we would dive down to Wolf Lake. I was at the age where I could get really into it and I brought my sailboating background into windsurfing and started getting competitive when I was 17 or 18 years old.

Is there much of a windsurfing scene in Chicago?

I think there's a small pocket of windsurfers in Chicago. It's not as big as sailing for sure, but there are some.

How did living in Chicago help you become an Olympic windsurfer?

The unique thing about Lake Michigan is there is a huge variety of winds and water you train on. Sometimes you'll have no wind and completely flat water and sometimes the wind will really pick up and it'll get pretty wavy, so in that sense it's a great place to train. It's a little difficult to do training in Chicago with the winter and all the changes in weather, so I do most of my training overseas.

What's a typical training week for you?

We train more like triathletes, which might be a surprise to some people that we don't just hang out at the beach all day. In a typical week on the water, we do usually four days on and one day off. We'll do breakfast, work out, a couple hours on the water, lunch, and a couple hours on the bike.

Are you out on the lake in the middle of January?

No. This year I was in Australia training. The 2011 World Championships were in Perth, so I was there for almost all winter. Then I head down to Florida for training. I'm definitely not sailing in January on the lake.

When you found out you were going to London, what was going through your head?

It was incredible. There are two events to qualify for our Olympics and I had a point lead going into our second event. When I found out, I was actually sitting in the ice bath recovering and my team leader and head coach were in the lounge and they called me in and my heart dropped. It took a while for it to really sink in.

Many people don't even know windsurfing is an Olympic sport. Why should people tune in?

It's much different than all the other Olympic sports and different than all the other styles of sailing as well. Windsurfing is very fast. In the Olympics there are going to be 38 athletes who are all going to be competing on the same course up to 25 miles an hour. It's very dynamic and it's a spectacle to watch even if you don't know anything about sailing or windsurfing.

What are you most excited about at the Olympics?

The sailing in Weymouth is some of the best I've ever had. It will be really spectacular with the world as your audience. There will be bleachers set up too. We never really have an audience; it's mostly online followers and whatnot. To race in front of a couple thousand fans will be something special to actually see and hear people cheering. SCOTT BOLOHAN IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

POST CARDS FROM BOB

U.S. windsurfer and Chicago native BOB WILLIS is sharing updates from the London Games with RedEye.

The good thing about being the first team to arrive at the Olympic Games is the general excitement. We got off the plane, flew through customs (the Olympic line), got our bags and were swarmed by media as we walked out of the airport.

The first few days after our celebrity arrival were a bit hectic. The team was tired, jet-lagged and a bit out of it. However, we pushed through and enjoyed every moment. Following our arrival at Heathrow Airport we bused to the London Olympic Village (in the Olympic lane), quickly checked into the village and then ventured over to the USA house to get all our Team USA gear ... an absurd amount of clothing.

The entire gear collection process took about four hours. The designers were extremely helpful; however, they definitely had a particular sizing style for the athletes—tight! Following the fittings, we were given four bags of clothing to try on, two from Nike and two from Ralph Lauren. It took me two hours to try on all the gear. The gear, however, looks very very good.

The next morning, we woke up at 6 a.m., took a team bus down to Weymouth and got situated in the sailing village in Portland. The sailing village, albeit not quite like the London village, still has the same Olympic feel.

The following day, I got my Olympic RSX kit—the colors look great and the sails stand out against the typical gray England background. I have sailed with my kit for three days now and I am starting to like it more and more—I think it will be just fine for the Games.

- 1 Make a prediction for the London Olympics.

I'll have a stroke watching UF grad Ryan Lochte, my summer Tebow.

Jack The Ripper will win the fencing gold medal.

I predict LeBron James will be annoying about winning (or losing).

A dude will hear "medal count," think it said "metal count," and throw horns.

Lots of people walking around London going "Yeah, the weather really does suck here!"

- 2 What sport would you have added to the Olympics?

Roque should be allowed to have its "Shining" moment at the Olympics again.

Sockball, last played in my parents' den in 1980. I'm still undefeated, thank you very much.

Freestyle rapping, so Melta World Peace can participate. Poor little guy.

Bags. Chicago would dominate.

Since it's in England, darts! But only as a demo sport.

- 3 Give U.S. windsurfer and Chicago native Bob Willis a nickname.

Sol Surfer.

The Sears Tower.

Bob "Wind Beneath His Own Wings" Willis.

Pretty much everyone here is gonna make a Sears joke, right? SEARS JOKE.

We used to call him the Willis Tower but it had nothing to do with windsurfing.

Get out while you can, Ryan

Oh no! Ryan Dempster has come down with a bad case of Cubs disease.

For those unfamiliar, it's a rare disease, very painful.

It happens like this. A player becomes a Cub. He falls in love with the city, the fans, the adoration, playing at Wrigley Field, day baseball, nighttime shenanigans, daytime shenanigans, the bars and the clubs, whatever.

So much so, he actually forgets there is something out there, spoken about only in distant places like St. Louis and Atlanta, called wins and losses. Yes, in these bizarre outposts, they matter.

Oh, they'll say they wanted to be traded to a contender, but when the time comes ... tempers flare.

Mark Grace was guilty of this. Derrek Lee vetoed a trade to the L.A. Angels!

Now Dempster hesitated on committing to the Braves, a legitimate contender, and they promptly moved on. Good for them. Bad for Ryan. And embarrassing. The message sent: "I'm not that interested in playing for a contender."

Don't give me the "best for me and my family" business. Everyone at the MLB level is compensated for their inconveniences. Everyone. Oh, and the Dodgers? Good luck. They want Matt Garza. Sigh. So we get a blow-up. Nice Carlos Zambrano imitation.

And by the way, nice fire sale by the Florida Marlins. Note to Kenny Williams: See what you can do to get Mark Buehrle back here. Still love him, and the Marlins are sellers!

Note No. 2 to Kenny: When considering whom to trade (and we know you are), don't rule out Gordon Beckham. I'm afraid he is heading south, never to be seen again.

Also on the table should be: John Danks, Gavin Floyd and Philip Humber (please, I can't take it!). And maybe Dylan Axelrod, though I like this kid. Kenny, we need another starter. The bullpen is fine now. Like I said, Buehrle!

Note to Ozzie Guillen: You're an idiot for falling for that Florida gig. Congrats, you're now in rebuilding mode ... forever!

Just like the Bulls are! Hey, we got Kirk Hinrich (again? ugh) and Marco Belinelli (a race car driver?).

Here's to permanent rebuilding!

THE MOUTHWATCH

No, not even close. 1994, my Little League team, the Kingsley Knights. ... I mean we were scoring at will. So hopefully if we match some of that production from back in 1994, then I'll be able to say that."

—Receiver Brandon Marshall, on whether this year's Bears offense is the most explosive he's been a part of BRIAN CASSELLA/TRIBUNE PHOTO

Price is right for Bears

The Bears traded an undisclosed 2013 draft pick to Tampa Bay on Thursday in an attempt to bolster their defensive line. The new Bear is tackle Brian Price, who has collected 27 tackles and three sacks in two seasons since being drafted out of UCLA. A word to the wise for the new guy: Hands off Jay Cutler in practice.

Sheets to the wind

Bears players have not been lugging thick playbooks around during training camp. Instead, many players are toting little carrying cases with the team's logo on them. Inside are iPads that are being used to hold the playbook and much more. And now that the players aren't dragging those giant binders anymore, it can mean only one thing: team bonfire!

SEEING 'RED'

'RED LIGHTS' STAR
CILLIAN MURPHY ON PSYCHICS & BATMAN

By Matt Pais

REDEYE

"The magazine's called RedEye?" asks "Red Lights" star Cillian Murphy, who played the villain in the 2005 horror-on-an-airplane film "Red Eye."

Yes, I tell him, and ask if he gets strange looks on planes. "No, thankfully I don't," the 36-year-old actor says. "I thought I would, but people forget movies quickly, man."

Not when actors choose parts as carefully as Murphy, who has appeared in memorable films such as "Inception," "Batman Begins," "Sunshine" and "28 Days Later." In "Red Lights," which was delayed Thursday to an Aug. 3 opening date, Murphy stars as Tom, a physicist determined to expose a renowned psychic (Robert De Niro) as a fraud.

Murphy says he embraces the entertainment value of psychics, but thinks it becomes "shady" when they prey upon the vulnerable and weak. "When people pretend to cure cancer, that's dangerous therapy you're getting into," he says. "But if people are desperate, people will keep searching and searching and searching."

At the Four Seasons Hotel, Ireland-born, London-dwelling Murphy and Spanish writer-director Rodrigo Cortes ("Buried"), 39, talked about buying into the illusion, when a role influences your own beliefs and preferring dark material to, say, "The Wedding Planner."

Cillian, after seeing Ryan Reynolds confined to a box in "Buried," how concerned were you about what Rodrigo would do to you?

Cillian Murphy: [Laughs.] Well, I saw "Buried" on my own in a small screening room in London in the summertime. It was an incredible experience that I will never forget. I had to go and have an ice cream afterwards. Everybody talks about that movie. It just affects your physiology. You just feel different afterwards. You could see that he was the real deal, what he achieved and the performance.

Cillian Murphy
LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE

I like the immersive experience of making a film where you get completely and utterly involved, physically and emotionally.'

—Cillian Murphy, on working with director Rodrigo Cortes

I enjoy directors who push you and challenge you and test you. I like the immersive experience of making a film where you get completely and utterly involved, physically and emotionally.

Which do you find more satisfying: when you're fooled, or when you've figured out the trick?

Rodrigo Cortes: When you go to see David Copperfield, you know that everything is a lie but you want to believe in that. You don't want to be there for a couple of hours spending 200 bucks to figure out that he doesn't fly. We all know that he doesn't fly; that's part of the thing. But you try to fool everybody in the sense that it's not about surprise, it's about challenging everybody. I love the films that ... you find yourself thinking about them a day later or two days later or three days later. So that's what really pleases me as a creator, if you achieve that.

Cillian, as a skeptic, do you try to go along with people like that or are you looking for a giveaway?

CM: When it's entertainment ... I went to see Copperfield and Criss Angel in L.A. when I was researching this and it was pure entertainment and it was amazing. It's like saying to actors or directors, "When you go to a film, are you constantly trying to figure out how do they get that shot or how did they do that?" You're just in it and you're watching it and enjoying it.

I read that when you played a physicist in "Sunshine" that may have impacted the way that you saw the world. Is that accurate, and how much did this role impact the way you see things, if at all?

CM: Yeah, when I did this movie called "Sunshine" and I was sort of agnostic I guess in my beliefs, and that certainly, the experience of making that film and researching it, and spending the time with all these unbelievable, intelligent, rational people, I guess I was tipped over into knowing I would be an atheist. It's a personal thing. And this film, it hasn't changed me in terms of being skeptical toward the paranormal world, but again I've seen the power these people have in terms of their personalities but it hasn't changed my position I guess.

You've had a fantastic career with a lot of memorable parts. How much interest do you have in doing a romantic comedy or something that would totally lighten things up? I was also thinking of your "Inception" co-star Leonardo DiCaprio, who has done almost exclusively serious films recently.

CM: It's just a matter of taste really. I don't say, "Don't send me any romantic comedies" to my agent. But it's generally the films that I enjoy watching and the stories that I enjoy telling and also reading are I guess more involved in the sort of darker side of psychology. Not always but I think in that world the scope for drama tends to be greater. So if you're talking about the end of the world or life and death, there's more at stake than "The Wedding Planner."

A lot of people are asking you about "The Dark Knight Rises," and understandably you don't want to give anything away. What do you think Batman's weakness is?

CM: Batman's weakness? Oh. That's a good question.

RC: Don't say kryptonite.

CM: It's bats, isn't it? He doesn't like bats, I think, from what I remember. He had a bad experience with bats, didn't he? I don't know. What I love about Batman, and I've said this before, why he's the coolest superhero is because he doesn't have any superpowers. He's just a really rich guy that does a lot of push-ups and has a lot of toys. That's a perfect example of the psychology of that character, what made him who he is. It's fascinating world the way that [director] Chris [Nolan] has opened it up and explored it. It is quite dark, those movies are quite dark, but people adore them.

You've talked about loving Nolan's work and those films. Why do you think they've caught on the way that they have?

CM: Because they're hugely entertaining but also very, very smart. They do not underestimate the audience and they know that the audience is able for this. This totally reinvigorated the superhero genre I think. I think Chris Nolan is one in a million. He's quite an extraordinary director.

You said you didn't feel like you filled the Batsuit quite right when you auditioned for the role. What was going through your head while wearing it?

CM: [Laughs.] Oh, man. You do your best. You do your best. For me, it's not a big deal, it was more of an opportunity to actually get to work with Chris and to do this little screen test and to work with him and then it turned into something else. That's what's really more important. Nostalgia's very dangerous. I think artists should be about moving forward. Nostalgia can be the death of any sort of art.

Something semi-phony to think about

Beware, David Copperfield.

Much of "Red Lights" revolves around Dr. Tom Buckley (Cillian Murphy), a physicist determined to expose any and all supposed psychics and paranormal visions as frauds. He knows when someone discreetly lifts a table to simulate something unexplained. That's the explanation: You did it, not a ghost.

Red Lights
(R)

However, Tom's boss and fellow skeptic, Dr. Margaret Matheson (Sigourney Weaver), refuses to let her colleague investigate blind psychic Simon Silver (Robert De Niro), who is about to make a highly anticipated, highly paid return after a 30-year absence from demonstrating behavior and possessing knowledge that blows his followers' collective minds.

Now is a good time to ask yourself if you get more enjoyment out of being fooled or out of uncovering a fraud.

Unfortunately, writer-director Rodrigo Cortes ("Buried") never allows us to give in to the possibility Drs. Buckley and Matheson reject—that perhaps someone could be capable of powers beyond scientific justification. Seemingly everyone in the media and the public in "Red Lights" buys into what Silver's selling, which probably doesn't represent how the off-screen universe feels about on-stage psychics/magicians/whatever you want to call them. The film also hinges on a big revelation that you'll see coming a mile away, and a final twist that strains to pull a fast one when the movie's few strengths are its somber examinations of curiosity and doubt.

Cortes captures the irresistible mystery of playing amateur detective into the allegedly incredible without the fascination or tension of "The Prestige." Some people can spot a fake; others prefer to go along for the ride. There's something disappointing about mental gymnastics that sacrifice an actual perspective for an empty sleight of hand.

NEW ON DVD

Boss: Season 1

Kelsey Grammer shows off his dramatic skills in this dark cable series. Grammer plays Tom Kane, ruthless mayor of Chicago. He's a man who has risen to power on the backs of others and has no problem stepping on a few more people to hang on to control despite being hampered by health problems. Political stories are only as good as the central players and Grammer shows the proper way such a role should be played. He can go from being a ruthless leader to confused health patient with ease.

Extras: Episode commentaries and a 16-minute featurette with Grammer and show creator Farhad Safinia discussing the series.

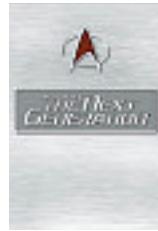

RICK BENTLEY, THE FRESNO BEE

Star Trek: The Next Generation: Season 1

The 1987 sequel starring Patrick Stewart proved creator Gene Roddenberry's concept was a keeper. Now it gets a spruce-up to HD Blu-ray, still in its original 4:3 (square frame) aspect ratio, with DTS sound.

Extras: Detailed new 90-minute making-of with cast/crew interviews explains how they went about "updating a cultural icon," looking at the sequel's development, refreshed design, makeup/costume/effects test footage, even a chat with the guy who didn't get the lead role (Stephen Macht)! Also, a comparison featurette outlines improvements from standard-def to high-definition, including re-created special effects; plus carry-over DVD bonus features.

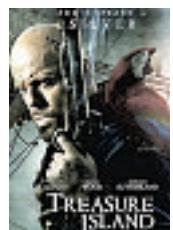

DIANE WERTS, NEWSDAY

Treasure Island

The classic 1883 pirate novel by Robert Louis Stevenson has been made into 30 different movies, spawned more than 20 prequels and sequels, and has been the source for at least one TV series. You can make that 31 films with the Syfy Channel adaptation starring Eddie Izzard, Elijah Wood and Donald Sutherland. The latest version works because of Izzard. He turned to a larger-than-life historical figure, Winston Churchill, for the inspiration to make his John Silver different from all the rest. Izzard makes Silver a character who can play both sides of an issue and always seem to be right. This is an impressive take on the classic story. Credit Izzard with making this made-for-cable offering a real treasure.

Extras: Commentary track with Izzard and director Steve Barron, making-of featurette, interviews, a tour of the ship.

RICK BENTLEY, THE FRESNO BEE

ALSO OUT THIS WEEK:*'Silent House'

A woman is terrorized inside her family's lakeside home. Elizabeth Olsen stars.

'The Deep Blue Sea'

Judge's wife is caught in a love affair with a pilot.

'Childrens Hospital: The Complete Third Season'

Rob Corddry stars in the cable comedy series.

'Inspector Lewis: 5th Series'

Kevin Whately plays Detective Inspector Robbie Lewis.

Richard Ayoade, Ben Stiller, Vince Vaughn and Jonah Hill star in 20th Century Fox's "The Watch."

Still looking for laughs

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

» mpais@tribune.com
» mattpais.com

!!! The Watch

A movie called "The Watch" couldn't have worse timing.

Just because 20th Century Fox changed the film's title from "Neighborhood Watch" to "The "Watch" doesn't mean the comedy about an (eventually) gun-toting neighborhood watch group plays any better a few months after the death of Trayvon Martin. Unsettling at any time, especially one week after the tragedy in Aurora, Colo., is the image of a supposedly friendly young man (played by Jonah Hill) with an extensive arsenal of deadly weapons under his bed.

Real-life horrors aside, "The Watch" feels like what might have happened if Hill, instead of crafting the much-funnier "21 Jump Street" (which likewise incorporated N.W.A.'s "Straight Outta Compton") had transposed a story of wannabe cops onto "Men in Black."

In the new film, suburban Ohio dopes played by Hill, Ben Stiller, Vince Vaughn and Richard Ayoade (director of the recommended "Submarine") work to protect the peaceful town of Glenview after a security guard loses his life and skin during an attack at the Costco that Evan (Stiller) manages. Soon they discover an extraterrestrial suspect, who adds to their already high stress levels brought on by Bob's (Vaughn) teenage daughter (Erin Moriarty) and Evan's creepy new neighbor (Billy Crudup).

As Evan's wife, Rosemarie DeWitt becomes the latest excellent actress to appear in a thankless role in a guy movie. Her character hopes to get pregnant—if she can just convince her husband to sleep with her.

"The Watch" looks more professional than Akiva Schaffer's previous effort, "Hot Rod," though that flop generated more, bigger laughs than found in "The Watch." Obviously the script from the co-writer of "Mr. Popper's Penguins" didn't improve nearly enough after Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg ("Superbad") overhauled it.

In 2011, the British sci-fi/comedy "Attack the Block" injected the alien invasion subgenre with some wicked language and genuinely scary creatures. "The Watch" offers a handful of chuckles, mostly from its stars riffing within the same personalities they always play. But the film's overall effect still resembles a scene in which Bob marvels at Russian nesting dolls, trying to get a laugh out of something everyone has seen before and particularly doesn't need right now.

Identity crisis

"Neighborhood Watch" seemed like a fine title for a Jonah Hill comedy about suburbanites battling space aliens—that is, until Florida teen Trayvon Martin was fatally shot by a volunteer watchman in February. Suddenly, that title wasn't so funny. The movie, opening Friday, now is called "The Watch."

It's not the only movie to undergo a name change. The Chris Pine drama "People Like Us," released last month, was titled "Welcome to People" as recently as March. Even some of the most famous movie titles weren't set in stone: "Hunter" eventually became the Arnold Schwarzenegger classic "Predator," and "A Boy's Life" was the working title for Steven Spielberg's "E.T.: The Extra-Terrestrial." Here are six other titles you might not recognize, though you almost certainly saw the movies they became:

Three Thousand

The number of warriors in a fantasy epic? A future date in a sci-fi film? It's actually the price, in dollars, of a night with Vivian Ward, the character portrayed by Julia Roberts in "Pretty Woman."

The Last First Kiss

Too mushy for male audiences, according to focus-group testing. So, this 2005 Will Smith comedy became "Hitch."

Comfort Food

Sounds like something the late Nora Ephron might have directed, right? That's what Universal Pictures initially called this raunchy 1999 teen comedy, but the film's eventual title came from its most famous scene: "American Pie."

The William Munny Killings

Well, it's a more palatable title than "The Cut-Whore Killings," but both seem better suited to a horror flick than a Western. Eventually, the movie's director and star, Clint Eastwood, chose "Unforgiven."

Mechanismo

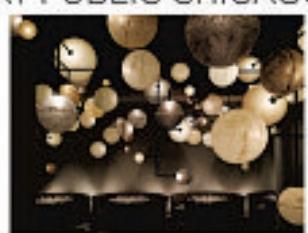

This odd title makes some sense if you know the plot. But let's be glad the filmmakers ultimately came up with "Blade Runner," Ridley Scott's sci-fi classic about humanoid robots that starred Harrison Ford. That's going to be it! And so the 18th James Bond movie found its name.

Tomorrow Never Lies

After this script was faxed to MGM, it's unclear who made the slip-up. But the next day a studio rep called director Roger Spottiswoode to say, "We love your title 'Tomorrow Never Dies'! That's going to be it!" And so the 18th James Bond movie found its name.

Cheesy acting, better dancing in 'Revolution'

By Lisa Arnett

REDEYE

"Step Up Revolution" starts with the same romantic setup as the original "Step Up," starring Channing Tatum and Jenna Dewan: Rough dude from the 'hood meets uptight uptown girl. Dancer Kathryn McCormick (Season 6 finalist from Fox's "So You Think You Can Dance") plays aspiring professional dancer/rich hotel mogul's daughter Emily, and Ryan Guzman (commercial actor, print model and former MMA fighter) plays Sean, a lowly hotel staffer who also happens to lead a dance crew.

This time around, the framework for elaborate dance sequences isn't a school recital, a street dance battle or a hip-hop dance competition. In an attempt to loosen up her style for a crucial dance audition, Emily joins Sean and his crew, The Mob, to stage elaborate flash mobs all over Miami. At first, their goal is to score enough YouTube video views to win a $100,000 contest. Then, they find out the Miami neighborhood where Sean and other Mob members grew up is going to be razed to make way for a new luxury hotel development, courtesy of Emily's big-shot dad. Emily suggests they stage a flash mob as a protest.

McCormick acts about as well as Guzman dances—serviceable but sometimes clunky. Both are newcomers to film acting, but because McCormick is a stunning dancer by trade and Guzman learned to dance for the movie, the film is at least without the distracttion of dance doubles. The dance scenes are undoubtedly more elaborate than the previous "Step Up" films, both in production value and the variety of styles represented. Some of the dancing, unfortunately, does have the occasional jerkiness that predecessor "Step Up 3-D" also suffered as a side effect of 3-D.

There are plenty of treats for "So You Think You Can Dance" fans, including more lines for Twitch ("Step Up 3D"), a captivating restaurant dance scene starring McCormick by contestant-turned-choreographer Travis Wall and an entertaining cameo appearance by Mia Michaels, who channels an exaggerated version of her "SYTYCD" judge persona as the pretentious artistic director of the dance company for which Emily auditions.

As Emily's brusque and dismissive hotel mogul father, Peter Gallagher is just as much the dance-movie villain as he was 12 years ago as the ruthless ballet company director in "Center Stage," but his sudden change of heart in the end is chuckle-worthy.

True-blue fans of dance movies are used to suspending disbelief, and they'll have to do it again to get through parts of "Step Up Revolution." But as a reward, you'll see the best dancing of the series.

Paul Dano and Zoe Kazan
in 'Ruby Sparks'

Dano real talk

By Matt Pais

REDEYE

Yes, Paul Dano's real-life girlfriend Zoe Kazan deliberately wrote certain things for him in "Ruby Sparks," in which the real-life couple plays a couple. The movie is not about them, though.

"When I read scenes, it was like, 'OK, I have to figure out what's going on here.' It wasn't like, 'Oh, I remember when we were in the grocery store and that [bleeping] happened,'" Dano says.

Dano plays Calvin, an author struggling to deliver his long-awaited sophomore novel who finds inspiration through his new character, Ruby Sparks—until Ruby (Kazan) comes to life and Calvin must reconcile his fantasy girl with reality.

At the Waldorf-Astoria hotel, Dano, 28 ("Little Miss Sunshine") talked about the real-life inspirations for Calvin, what most guys would do with the power to change their partner and how often people salute his role in "There Will Be Blood" by offering him free milkshakes.

Calvin has the power to change Ruby, which is a slippery slope. What do you think most guys would do with that power?

Oh, lordy. What they say they would do is different from what they'd actually do, and hopefully you'll think twice about it after you see the film if you have that power. I don't know; I think Harry [Chris Messina] does a good job of being the voice for the audience, or especially a male audience.

So what would guys say they would do, and what would they actually want to do?

I think the first thought a lot of people would have is, "More [oral sex] or bigger [breasts]," like Harry says. I think most people would hopefully just not do it.

If we were guessing about percentages, would men or women be more likely to take advantage of this opportunity?

I feel like I know a lot of women who are like, [if you asked them], "If you could change your husband," [they would say], "Get him to [bleepin'] put the toilet seat down." Sometimes it's really simple things. I guess I would go with men. Something that I feel about the film is control over relationships is not a one-way street.

And these are dangerous questions.

I'm scared to answer. I'm scared to answer you right now.

I have to ask you how often you get people shouting about drinking milkshakes lately, and how many you've gotten for free over the years?

Yeah, sometimes I get a milkshake from a waiter and I say, "I did not order this," and somebody else in the place sent it to me. ... I'm so proud to be a part of the film; it's a good one to get heckled about. I've had some strange people. I've had somebody yell it right in my face. It's like, "What?" It happens every now and then. It's not too bad.

Eric Hailey and Dana Pupkin in 'Qwerty.'

Possibly the angriest rom-com ever made?

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

» mpais@tribune.com
» mattpais

To each his own and all, but the Chicago-made romantic comedy "Qwerty" possesses a pretty warped perception of behavior that could be regarded as charming.

When Scrabble devotee Zoe (Dana Pupkin) calls her boyfriend Marty (Eric Hailey) at his DMV job, he answers the phone by saying, "What the [bleep] do you want?" This inspires only a giggle from Zoe, who first takes a shine to the guy when he stands on a department store table and screams, "You're better than your underwear!" Marty cannot handle the existence of $55 designer underwear and people who want to buy it. Zoe shares this judgment. As far as chemistry goes, there you have it.

The film's problem, or one of them, is that the crisply edited "Qwerty" never turns into the sweet story of outsiders finding in each other respite from the unhappy world outside. Yes, Zoe can't stand her obnoxious family and co-workers, and Marty calls almost everyone an a-hole, but the injustices coming their way just seem like a blend of some people's general douchiness and a lingering resentment that Zoe and Marty have for anyone who's decent-looking and/or happy. It's great to see a love story in which neither main character seeks a major hottie with a super-awesome job, but that doesn't mean viewers won't ask why she's so taken with a scruffy guy who doesn't own a phone and moves in with her so fast.

Qwerty
Not rated

In the midst of all this phony romance, Zoe also longs to compete in the national Scrabble championships, though first she must conjure the courage to join a local Scrabble club. Her ambivalence is never explained outside the notion that people used to mock her love of Scrabble, and "Qwerty" neglects to document her transition away from past scars to a more stable, adult place. Both she and Marty recognize suicidal tendencies in each other, but what exactly has them so down remains a mystery in a movie that mistakes creepy for cute.

Zoe and Marty are two bitter people choosing to be miserable together, seemingly oblivious that geek culture has taken over society and that a jerk co-worker ripping on your Scrabble hobby has nothing to do with life outside the DMV—which most people recognize as one of the worst places in any town.

See it: 8 p.m. Saturday, Monday and Wednesday at Gene Siskel Film Center.

Brunch 'n' munch

8 new brunches to try before the summer ends

By Lisa Arnett and Kate Bernot | REDEYE

Beach trips and picnics are staples for summer fun, but there's nothing quite like lazing away an afternoon at brunch. Forgo your regular haunt and consider checking out the new brunch service at these eight restaurants. As an added bonus, five have outdoor seating so you can soak up some rays with your sunnyside-up eggs.

Hash House A Go Go

1212 N. State Parkway 312-202-0994
Take it or leave it

Some people have brunch to nurse a hangover. Some want an excuse to sip fun cocktails before noon. Others live to Instagram their entree the second it comes to the table. New Gold Coast restaurant Hash House A Go Go has the potential to fulfill all of the above. An Indiana-raised chef founded this restaurant in San Diego more than a decade ago on the idea of "twisted farm food," which apparently means an obscenely large menu of comfort food served in even bigger portions. I stopped in during opening week to see whether it would be good or just gimmicky.

Why everybody's waffling: Anyone serving chicken and waffles within a five-block radius of fried chicken king Art Smith's Table Fifty-Two has guts. So Hash House goes all out with a version that's stupid huge: A steak knife holds two fried chicken breasts atop four bacon-laced waffles and a gigantic sprig of rosemary, and fried leeks stick out of the top, looking like hay straight out of a farmer's bale. My server suggested I discard the rosemary "Christmas tree," remove the knife, unstack the chicken and dig in. It's a good strategy, but I still barely made it through half. This sweet-and-salty calorie bomb ($15.95) isn't as good as Smith's—but then again, his $24 version costs a lot more.

Sweet stuff: Buttermilk pancakes—called flapjacks here, of course—actually are a pancake, singular. A 14-inch-wide pizza-size one, to be exact, with flavors such as mango-coconut, blackberry-granola and Snickers. The caramelized sweetness of the brown sugar-banana version will lull any sweet tooth into submission, and it's a ton of food for $7.95.

Day drinking: Apparently Hash House also has four locations in Vegas, which doesn't surprise me when I see that the more-is-more philosophy continues on the drink menu. Desserty espresso drinks include the s'mores mocha, crowned with marshmallow fluff and graham crackers ($6.95), while the 20-ounce B.L.T. bloody mary ($10.95) features lettuce, tomato and bacon in the glass plus two pieces of toast. Then there's the O'Hare of the Dog, a 24-ounce canned beer in a paper bag served with five slices of bacon ($4.95). If the decor weren't so understated—think black-and-white farm photos and tractor seats on the walls, but no servers in overalls—I'd feel like I was in a theme park.

Bottom line: The eat-to-excess philosophy could work in this corner of the Gold Coast best known for its drink-to-excess tourist-trap bars, especially with a late-night weekend menu (something tells me the food will taste even better after a couple rounds). If you're looking for a refined brunch experience, this isn't it, but for a novelty brunch when you're sick of The Bongo Room, it'll do.

Grandma J's Local Kitchen
BARRY BRECHISEN PHOTO FOR REDEYE

Grandma J's Local Kitchen

!!!!
1552 N. Kedzie Ave.
773-227-3626
Off to a good start

Nana, Grammy, Oma, Abuela ... whatever you call your grandmother, chances are she'd want you to eat a wholesome breakfast before you start your day. That's the mission at Grandma J's, a quirky, comfy BYOB Humboldt Park cafe that packs a lot of sentiment into a small storefront. From black-and-white portraits to an Etta James-heavy soundtrack to board games, the dining room has about as much vintage kitsch as a yard sale. But it's not artificial nostalgia: Owner Layla Malia Krause named the place after her mother (Grandma J herself), who has five grandkids, and Krause aims to channel her comforting culinary presence.

Good eggs: The menu leans heavily toward the savory category—the only sweet dish is a trio of light, just-off-the-griddle French toast sticks ($5)—and that means cage-free eggs top nearly every breakfast offering. The Works ($11) nestles two perfectly runny poached eggs atop mounds of spinach, kale, mushrooms, potatoes and grilled tomatoes, and includes a base of prosciutto and super-thick toast (baked just around the corner at Roeser's) to soak up all the creamy yolk and hollandaise. On the simpler side, Egg in the Hole ($8) delivers two slices of bread—try the Hawaiian bread option for a bit of sweetness—with a silver dollar-size hole cut out of each center to make room for a fried egg.

Day drinking: Your granny might not approve of imbibing before noon, but Grandma J's doesn't mind. Bring your own champagne to mix with the three juices on the mimosa platter ($6), which are served with chilled flutes and sliced berries. The pineapple and cranberry juices are a nice change of pace if you feel stuck in an OJ rut, or opt for the virgin bloody mary fixings ($4) if you've brought vodka.

Is it lunchtime yet? From an individual bacon-wrapped meatloaf to a substantial organic beef burger, there are just as many lunch dishes as breakfast offerings. Chicken is free-range and the bacon's nitrate-free, making the cobb sandwich ($9) an especially wholesome and hearty choice.

Bottom line: The menu at Grandma J's is as straight forward and American as apple pie: no fuss, no frills, just classics made with fresh, local ingredients. Like a brunch with Bubbe, though, you probably won't get up from the table in less than an hour, leaving lots of time for reminiscing while you wait for your food.

Experiment with fun brunch drinks such as a green bloody mary with apple, jalapeno and tomatillo ($10). 10 a.m.-3 p.m. Saturday-Sunday.

OUTDOOR SEATING Bar Toma (110 E. Pearson St. 312-266-3110) in the Gold Coast takes favorites from chef Tony Mantuano's Italian dinner menu and brunches them up, including the much-loved bomba (a puffy balloon of pizza dough) served with eggs and bacon ($9) and a caprese salad-inspired bloody mary with roma tomatoes and basil ($5). 11 a.m.-3 p.m. Sunday.

OUTDOOR SEATING G.E.B. (841 W. Randolph St. 312-888-2258), Graham Elliot's new eatery in the West Loop, serves variations on classic morning dishes including fried chicken with a corn waffle and stewed collard greens ($14) and oatmeal with medjool dates and a shot of whiskey ($7). 10 a.m.-2 p.m. Saturday-Sunday.

Yusho (2853 N. Kedzie Ave. 773-904-8558) in Avondale recently started a $20 Sunday noodle brunch that includes a bowl of ramen or soba plus a drink and soft-serve ice cream for dessert. Noon-5 p.m. Sunday.

The Peasantry (2723 N. Clark St. 773-868-4888) in Lincoln Park doles out brunch dishes both sweet (walnut cream-stuffed French toast with cherry bourbon syrup, $6), salty (short rib pastrami hash, $13) and a little bit of both (pancetta-chocolate waffle, $9). 11 a.m.-3 p.m. Saturday-Sunday.

OUTDOOR SEATING Tavernita (151 W. Erie St. 312-274-1111) in River North offers a brunch deal designed for sharing: For $12.50 per person, order four dishes to split with pals. Choices include fried chicken and churros, a fun spin on the down-home combo of chicken and waffles. 11:30 a.m.-3 p.m. Sunday.

Wiz Khalifa
GETTY IMAGES

Under the influence of Wiz Khalifa

Chicago Tribune

Wiz Khalifa's title for his tour, "Under the Influence of Music," did not spring completely from the impression he has made on the hip-hop and pop music scene with his mixtapes and major-label songs that put an alternative vibe on contemporary rap styles. The Pittsburgh rapper also is playing off a subject he speaks of often in his lyrics: being under the influence of marijuana. But Khalifa offers more than a collection of verse and stanza about being smoked out—there is some substance, content-wise, to his music. And according to Khalifa's website, he's digging even further into his roots for his upcoming album, "O.N.I.F.C." For the "Influence" tour,

Why go: Sometimes it takes a live performance to see if Khalifa's skills as a lyricist go beyond his "Black and Yellow" hit single.

Reconsider if: You've never been fond of "black and yellow ... black and yellow ... black and yellow ..."

Details: 5:30 p.m. Friday at First Midwest Bank Amphitheatre, 19100 S. Ridgeland Ave., Tinley Park; $25-$90, livenation.com

Khalifa has rounded up a group of rappers who also offer an alt flair to contemporary rap: Mac Miller (co-headliner), Chiddy Bang, Kendrick Lamar and more.

Rascal Flatts keeps Country party going

Chicago Tribune

Rascal Flatts is up next for the Country MegaTicket, the US99 (WUSN FM 99.5) summer concert series at First Midwest Bank Amphitheatre. Little Big Town, Edens Edge and the Eli Young Band will help the Flatts keep the honky tonk party going where Sugarland left off in June. (MegaTicket gives fans an opportunity to purchase tickets for a group of country music's top shows before individual tickets go on sale.)

Why go: The Flatts' rocking country and folksy ballads will hold you until the next MegaTicket show (Jason Aldean on Aug. 18).

Reconsider if: You missed out on the MegaTicket deal, so you'll have to catch up with it next year.

Details: 7 p.m. Saturday at First Midwest Bank Amphitheatre, 19100 S. Ridgeland, Tinley Park; $25-$95; livenation.com

FEST FRIDAYS

Pick your music and pack your dancing shoes for a weekend of Chicago festival favorites

By Renee Pinckney | REDEYE

Get ready to dance: This weekend's street fests offer an array of music styles that should hit a high note with festival-goers across the city. Music will be the heart-beat of Rogers Park, with both Celebrate Clark Street and the Igbo-Fest kicking off on Saturday. Fiesta del Sol, Taste of Lincoln Avenue and Wicker Park Fest will continue the trend, bringing tunes to blocks across the city.

RENEE PINCKNEY IS A REDEYE INTERN.

Wicker Park Fest

When: Noon-10 p.m. Saturday and Sunday

Where: Milwaukee Avenue between North Avenue and Paulina Street in Wicker Park

Cost: $5 suggested donation

The agenda: This popular street fest revolves around live music, with three stages offering something for everyone. Highlights include Cursive, the Budos Band, The Drums, Lucero, Joe Pug and more.

Get artsy: Keep an eye out for works from two local arts organizations, Redmoon Theater and Defibrillator Gallery, which will be showcased at the newly added arts section.

Igbo-Fest

When: 1:30-10 p.m. Saturday

Where: Warren Park in West Rogers Park

Cost: Free admission

The agenda: This annual one-day picnic organized by the Igbo Associations of Chicago aims to showcase the cultural heritage of the Igbo people of southeastern Nigeria. Expect traditional Igbo foods and music from Ike Adolphy & De-Meritables.

Bonus: Promised raffle prizes (tickets cost $1 a pop) include a 40-inch TV, laptop, camera and other goodies.

Taste of Lincoln Avenue

When: Noon-10 p.m. Saturday and Sunday

Where: Lincoln Avenue between Fullerton and Wrightwood avenues in Lincoln Park

Cost: $10 suggested donation

The agenda: Featuring nearly 40 musical acts on four stages, this outdoor street fest will showcase a bevy of pop, rock and blues talent. Headliners include San Diego rockers Augustana, Chicago blues guitarist Pistol Pete and local fan favorites Dot Dot Dot and 16 Candles.

Celebrate Clark Street

When: 1-11 p.m. Saturday and Sunday

Where: Clark Street between Morse and Touhy avenues in Rogers Park

Cost: $5 suggested donation

The agenda: Dubbed a "music street party," the seventh annual event will offer folk music and dance from around the world, providing a multicultural mix of music that's as diverse as the neighborhood.

Must-see musical act: SMOD, a band from Mali best known for its mixture of rap, hip-hop, folk and traditional music, will make its first appearance in Chicago.

UPCOMING FESTIVALS

Lollapalooza: Aug. 3-5 in Grant Park Edgefest: Aug. 4-5 in Edgewater Wrigleyville Summerfest: Aug. 4-5 in Wrigleyville

MISSED CONNECTIONS | LINE OF THE WEEK

Man for man / Blue line / Thursday

You are cute! We both got on at Clark and Lake. Stood right next to each other. Wish we could've spoken. Too many people.

20 signs he's not the one

The Date Report

1. He won't come to your place.

2. He can't seem to remember things you've mentioned multiple times, like a big assignment at work, how much you want to see a certain movie and that you don't eat meat.

3. You get great news and he isn't the first—or even second or third—person you think to call.

4. You need to refill your Xanax prescription before spending seven days in a row together on vacation.

5. He's always "too busy" to make plans with you, working, playing Scrabble on his iPhone, watching sports with his buddies. There's always something.

6. He doesn't seem that interested in meeting your friends. You have no interest in introducing him.

7. He goes away to a foreign country for two weeks and you're like "Send me a postcard—next!"

8. His face doesn't light up when he sees you enter the room.

9. He ignores you when he brings you home to meet his parents.

10. The sex is amazing but it's not enough to make you miss him when he's not around.

11. He has no idea what you do for a living and doesn't know how to pronounce/spell your last name.

12. If you leave something minor at his place, like a piece of jewelry, he gives it back to you immediately the next time he sees you.

13. He's hung up on his ex.

14. He tries to guilt trip you into not using a condom.

15. You often find yourself making excuses for him. "Oh, he's just being rude to you because he didn't get 10 hours of sleep last night..."

16. Instead of telling you why he's upset, he punches walls, kicks door jambs, or storms out of the room.

17. He can't put his cell phone down ... even when you are on a romantic date.

18. You get a gut feeling in your stomach that tells you he isn't.

19. He doesn't seem to care or know what to do when you tell him your feelings are hurt. If you're crying, he tells you to stop or doesn't even acknowledge that you're crying.

20. He gives you some BS about fearing commitment or not being ready to be in a relationship. Side note: Guys, you need to think of another way to say this; it's just getting annoying at this point.

Some fave actresses started out as models

MCT

Did you ever wonder what happens to the superstar model once she's glittered for her last close-up? Well some of them, like Carmen Dell'Orefice, just keep on posing. The white-haired Dell'Orefice has been modeling since 1947 and still is slouching with the best of them. HBO is offering an intimate view of some of the world's most famous faces when it premieres the documentary, "About Face: Supermodels Then and Now" at 9 p.m. Monday. But "now" is not always the end of the runway. Many models answer the siren call of film and television, extending their careers long after others have gone to the bone yard (so to speak).

Charlize Theron
Theron, currently starring in "Snow White and the Huntsman" and "Prometheus," lost her father when she was 15. That same year she left her native South Africa to become a model in Europe. "My mom entered me in a local modeling contest as a joke with some of my friends who came up with the idea," she says. "... I won. There was a burning ambition to be an actress, but it didn't have a name for me. I didn't grow up in a society that really celebrated actors ... I never thought: 'I want to grow up to be an actor.' But I've been subconsciously acting my entire life."

Sofia Vergara
Vergara ("Modern Family") remembers she was a 17-year-old at the beach in her native Colombia when she was discovered. "I wasn't a model or anything. I was just a girl at the beach. And they said, 'Can you do this commercial?' I said, 'Yeah, of course.' And I did this Pepsi commercial, and it became huge. Everybody goes: 'Who's that girl?' But I was in Catholic school my last year of high school. I just wanted to finish high school and go to dentist school, which I did for three years. But then things started changing, and you start getting opportunities and getting offers of money and you start following your instinct. And here I am."

Angie Harmon
The "Rizzoli & Isles" star nabbed her first modeling job when she was still a baby. "It was in a hospital where they teach you how to give your child a bath. They said, 'Let's take the Harmon baby.' And my father went, 'Oh, no.' It wasn't something that my parents pushed me into. First of all, because I wasn't pretty all my life. But I just enjoyed it. I think the girls now realize it's a business. I think it's good you realize it's a business."

The Wrap

Will the day come that appearing on a YouTube series is as desirable as working in TV? It's already here, says Jennifer Beals, star of an upcoming series for YouTube's Wigs channel.

"I think it's so fascinating what's happening—that we have this other platform for material that is incredibly intimate and it feels like you don't have to wait for somebody's permission to be creative," Chicago native Beals said. "You don't have to wait for that magic, huge number in order to go tell a story. And I love that."

Wigs, created by producer-directors Rodrigo Garcia and Jon Avnet, targets women with dramatic serials starring actresses including Julia Stiles, America Ferrera and Jena Malone. Each bears a woman's name. Beals' series, "Lauren," begins Aug. 13. Jones' series, "Kendra," starts Nov. 12.

In a sign of the disappearing lines between TV and the Internet, YouTube addressed the Television Critics Association summer press tour for the first time Wednesday. The group's

OTHER ONLINE SHOWS

YouTube unveiled other shows for its online channels:

- » "Cybergeddon," a thriller about cyberterrorism from "CSI" creator Anthony Zuiker.
- » "Runaways," a teen thriller airing on the Awesomeness TV YouTube channel.
- » "Blue," starring Julia Stiles, already airs on the WIGS YouTube channel.

twice-annual press tours long were the domain of, well, TV networks.

YouTube, meanwhile, once the domain of amateurs, now is creating stars of TV and film—just as TV and film stars are turning to YouTube.

Beals and Jones, star of another Wigs serial, both are former stars of canceled Fox shows. Beals appeared on the network's "Lie to Me" and "The Chicago Code" and Jones was on last season's "Alcatraz."

Jones said she wasn't put off by the lower pay of working online.

"It's a pioneering territory," she said. "I think to be on the forefront of that is an honor."

Burn Fat Get Paid

"Miracle Fat Burner In A Bottle" - Dr. Oz

Science Uncovers Fat Burning Effect In Raspberry Ketones

In recent studies, scientists have found a link between Raspberry Ketones and weight loss. The ketones are the primary compound for the aroma in the widely loved fruit. By increasing the body's level of adiponectin and norepinephrine, it raises the body's metabolism causing significant fat loss.

SimplePure Nutrition Introduces Pay Per Pound Program

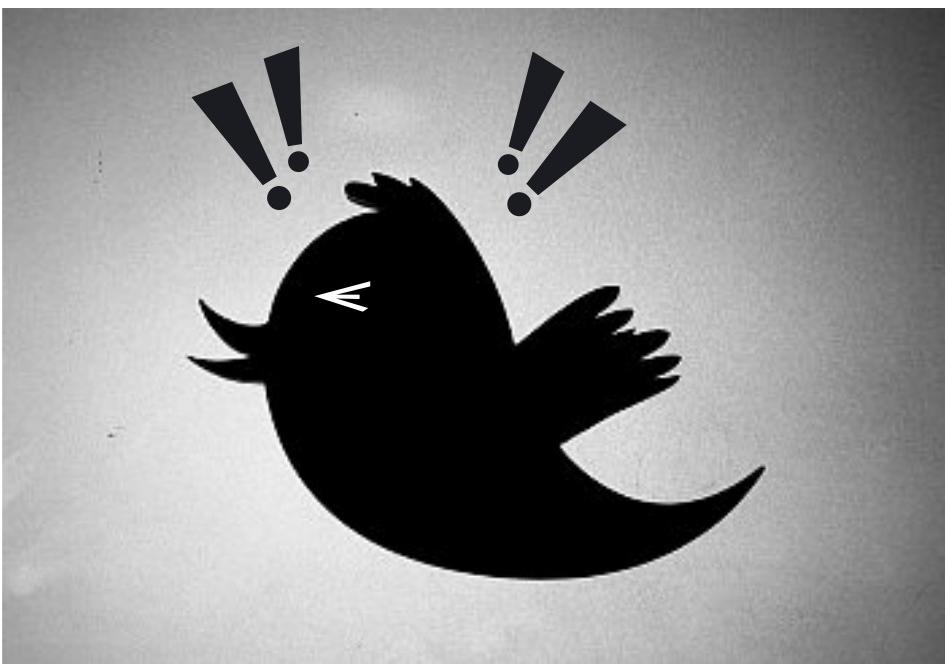

With the exception of TV's Dr. Oz declaring Raspberry Ketones the "miracle fat burner in a bottle" there has been limited publicity on the recent discovery. SimplePure Nutrition has created the Pay Per Pound program so consumers can try the new formula and provide feedback for their marketing campaign. Space is limited so SimplePure is encouraging the public to act fast to secure their spot in the program.

5 ways to annoy people on Twitter

CNN

Every time we join a new social network, we're given a clean slate: a bright little area in which we can prove just how employable, dateable and unhateable we really are. Unfortunately, some of us end up looking horrible. Granted, some of us genuinely are horrible, so perhaps those profiles should be left untouched for the sake of humanity at large. But we're going to go right ahead and believe in the "good of man" and assume that you're all completely unaware of just how tool-ish you look. Today we're going to tackle Twitter profiles. Here are five instances in which your Twitter persona might annoy.

When you grub for followers

"Follow me and I will follow you. Retweet me and I will retweet you! Add me to a list and I will surrogate the hell outta your unborn children!"

Wanna know how to get more Twitter followers? Be interesting, that's how. Follow people. Retweet things that they say. Start a conversation—and make sure that the whole thing isn't just a desperate plea for attention.

When you look like spam

"27/F <3 :) &$$$$$$$$" [insert grainy, cleavagey picture here]

Unless your future employers have a booth at the Las Vegas Sex Convention, maybe not such a good move to crib a spambot's style. Also, nix the GeoCities-era emoticons and symbols. There are plenty of sites and services that let you add real symbols to tweets and profiles.

When you look like a stalker

"My hobbies are loving New Kids on The Block, listening to NKOTB, and rummaging through the trash of NKOTB. They fill my soul. I have nothing else." [insert picture of NKOTB here]

Unless you run a celebrity fansite, your social profile should reflect, hmmm, YOU. If there really is nothing else to your personality beyond your love for Lady Gaga and/or Justin Bieber, perhaps consider seeking counseling.

When you're a nowhere (wo)man

["Profile left blank"]

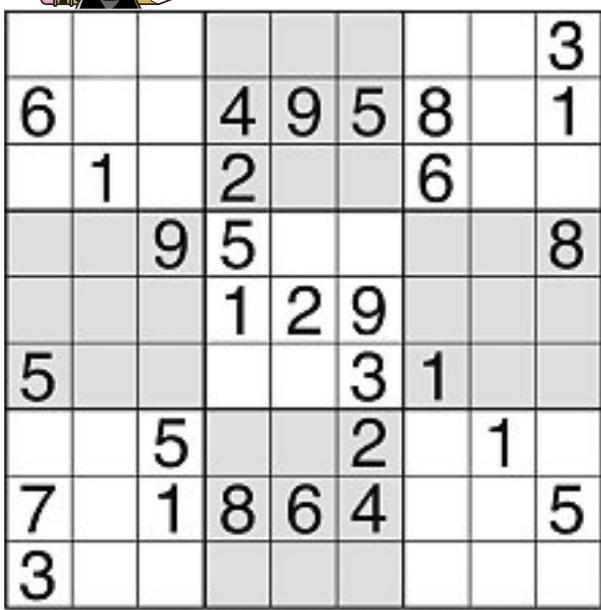

You're probably someone's dad or aunt or grandma who joined Twitter solely to creep on others' tweets. Maybe just give him/her a call instead?

When you brag

"Bomb-ass social media ninja. Killer gams. Heart of gold. Tweeting the best [bleep], repping my ceramic kitten collection hardcore."

Unless written ironically (and please note, people on the Web often cannot recognize irony, humor or the difference between "your" and "you're"), such unsubtle crowing makes people hate you. That's not to say you shouldn't play up your accomplishments in your profile—you definitely should mention your place of employ (if they're cool with it), links to any personal websites you might have and some carefully chosen hobbies and interests.

'REVOLUTION' STARS CHOOSE SIDES ON DANCE MOVIE BATTLES

By Lisa Arnett | REDEYE

They're leaping off cars, shimmying down escalators and basically just throwing down spicy moves. "Step Up Revolution" co-stars Kathryn McCormick and Ryan Guzman are no strangers to fancy footwork, so we asked them who would win in these dance battle matchups. The flick opens Friday; read our full interview with the co-stars at redeyechicago.com. LMARNETT@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEATS

Ryan Guzman

Kathryn McCormick

Ren McCormack
(Kevin Bacon)
from "Footloose"

Johnny Castle
(Patrick Swayze)
from "Dirty Dancing"

Sara Johnson
(Julia Stiles)
from "Save the Last Dance"

Honey Daniels
(Jessica Alba)
from "Honey"

David
(Omarion Grandberry)
from "You Got Served"

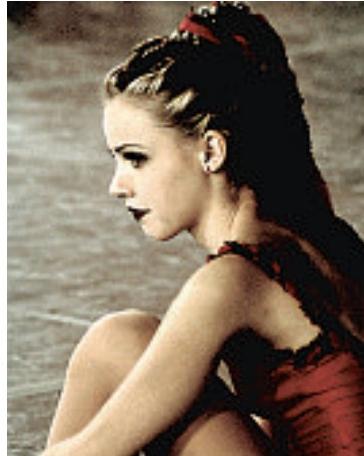

Turbo
(Michael Chambers)
from "Breakin'"

Tony Manero
(John Travolta)
from "Saturday Night Fever"

Pierre Dulaine
(Antonio Banderas)
from "Take the Lead"

Nina Sayers
(Natalie Portman)
from "Black Swan"

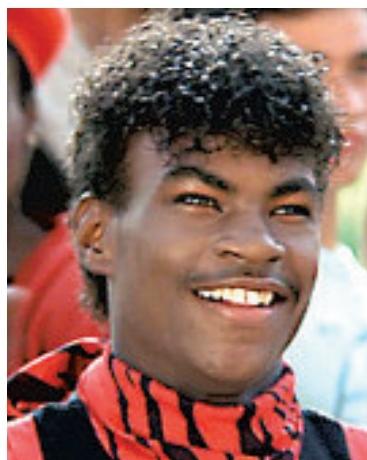

"Patrick Swayze. Johnny Castle. Maybe it's just that Patrick Swayze has a thing with the ladies that you're just like attracted to. He just has this rawness to him." —KM

"I'm not a lady." —RG

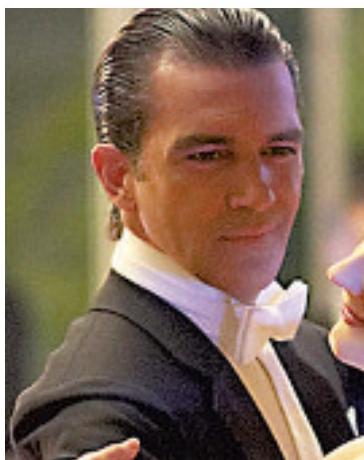

"Well, I'm a guy, so I'm gonna go with Jessica Alba." —RG

"See, I would go with Julia Stiles. She did more of a variety [of styles of dance]." —KM

"Turbo was the man! Omarion's great, he's great, but I think Turbo would take him." —RM

"I heard John Travolta was like trained in dance his whole life. I heard the Queen of England at one point wanted to dance—no, Princess Diana—wanted to dance with John Travolta." —RG

"I'm sure she did!" —KM

"I actually take ballet in Los Angeles when I'm there and [Amanda Schull] was actually in my class the other day. And she's still got it, she's a gorgeous dancer." —KM

Number of No. 1 albums Nas has had on the Billboard 200, with his newest "Life is Good" selling 149,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

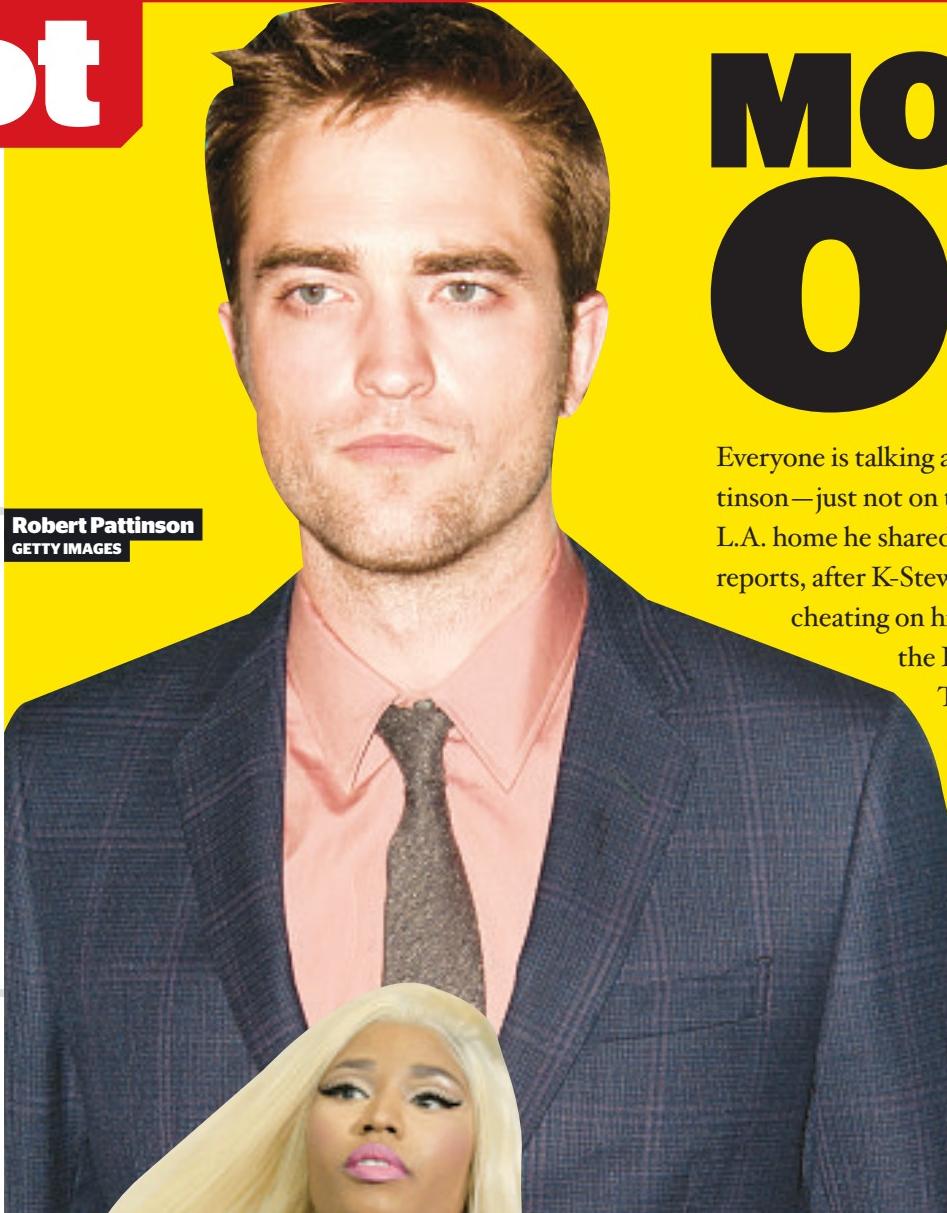

Weir in the world?

Where will Olympic figure skater (and gold-medal dresser) Johnny Weir be Friday during the Opening Ceremonies in London? Sipping on "a bottle of Krug champagne atop a Manhattan building" with his husband and friends, of course! Weir outlined his plans and excitement for the games Thursday in a blog post for people.com.

MOVING OUT

Everyone is talking about Kristen Stewart and Robert Pattinson—just not on the record. RPattz has moved out of the L.A. home he shared with his longtime girlfriend, people.com reports, after K-Stew issued a public apology Wednesday for cheating on him with her married "Snow White and the Huntsman" director, Rupert Sanders.

The rest is all speculation.

"We put an ad on Craigslist, for over-55, full nudity feature film."

Oh no he didn't!

An amorous fan at Nicki Minaj's Miami concert Tuesday made it on stage and was able to get his hands around her waist before security gave him a beat down. "... almost had to put them little puppy paws on somebody 2nite," Minaj tweeted about the incident.

The 'Mad' world

"Mad Men" fans can breathe easy—they won't be losing Peggy Olson next season. Creator Matthew Weiner—who normally is very hush-hush about his plans for the show—told tvline.com that actress Elisabeth Moss "has not left the show." He also told the site that there will be a Season 7 for the show, even though it's only signed up for one more right now. Very good, very good.
